

Many college students don't own cars, making grocery shopping difficult and time-consuming. They often rely on walking, biking, or limited public transportation, which restricts how much they can carry and when they can shop. This leads to frequent small trips, higher delivery costs, or reliance on unhealthy convenience foods. The lack of affordable, efficient grocery transport options creates ongoing stress and limits access to fresh, nutritious food.

(Refined using ChatGpt)